

Worldwide, public and also social services are subject to privatization and commodification. In this social policy context, it is harder to deliver social interventions as a matter of rights rather than choice. Social work's key instrument is the personal relationship, although this does not restrict transactions to the private sphere. Competent social work interventions straddle the private and the public realm thereby defining the nature of what is "social" in society as something "binding"...